All the small things

When everyone is in the theatre in their seats and ready to watch All the Small Things the lights will go down a little bit. It will not go completely dark; you will still be able to see. It is the way of showing that the play is about to start.

All the small things

In All the Small Things we meet Katherine. She plays the part of Myrtle, who loves stories. She is a kind, fun and magical character who helps people who visit her to be happier in their lives.

We also meet Billy who plays the role of Martin.

Martin starts the play quite stressed because he is lost, but by the end he is really happy because he has had so much fun in Myrtle's house.

All the small things

There are songs in the play and recorded music which Katherine and Billy sing along to. It has been specially written for the play. If it ever feels too loud for you, you can cover your ears or put your ear defenders on.

There is also a puppet in the show. His name is Gus and he is made out of found objects. You can see his body is a basket, his feet are a pair of gloves, and his head is an upside down gravy boat. He honks to speak, but it isn't too loud.

All the small things

It is fine to talk to the people you are sitting with about what is happening on stage but if you try and talk to Katherine or Billy during the show, they won't be able to answer you because they will be busy acting out the story.

All the small things

At the end of the play, the audience may clap to show they have enjoyed watching. You can join in if you want to.

All the small things

We hope you enjoy the story of All the Small Things and have a nice time visiting the theatre.
